

Press Release

This template makes writing a press release easy by dividing the document into the necessary sections and elements that are required for a clear press release. At the top of the press release is a place for a logo for your company/institution which serves to give the release credibility and recognition. Underneath this is a section for contact information regarding the release along with the date of the release. Next is the headline and subtitle which need to grab the attention and provide enough detail to make the purpose of the release clear at a glance. Finally, the content of the press release starts with a location, date and summary of the content followed by the body of the release.

This is the Headline

This is a subtitle to the headline giving more information about the headline.

City, Country – September 19, 2021 – Summary/overview of facts including who, what, when as well as why the press should care enough to write about this.

Paragraph one, with additional details about the announcement. The most important info goes in this paragraph.

Paragraph two goes here, with even more details about the announcement. Also include a quote backing up the claims and statements above. Oftentimes there will be a quote from the CEO or other executives as well as a quote from customers or partners, depending on the nature of the announcement.

Paragraph three goes here and wraps it up, with details about pricing, availability, etc. . . paragraph include some standard boilerplate text for the company (see below). The entire release is designed to be one page long at most (ideally). Keep the length short and to the point. . . newswire services only allows a certain number of characters and then charges for additional time you put out a release on the news wire you'll want to convert it into a PDF and put it on your website in a Press section in the company area as well - that way the content will get in front of search engines and help your overall site ranking in search results.
